Dennis Beebe History of the Jeep

Dennis Beebe and his daughter from Solvang, CA. He had arranged and lead our tour in Jeeps of Solvang last December.

He gave us a wonderful slideshow about the early history of the Jeep. As Eisenhower said, the Jeep "helped win World War II." Dennis. started by explaining that originally, horses were the main form of quick transportation in battle. But, during World War I efforts were made to move away from horses and to mechanize the process of transportation. Some ideas were to use motorcycles and making normal trucks into four-wheel-drive vehicles, but none of these options proved fit for the U.S. Army.

Eventually, during the 20s and 30s, the U.S. Army finally came up with guidelines for these vehicles, with which companies would create and send prototypes to the Army. Dennis told us about the competition between companies trying to win over the ability to produce these vehicles, mainly between three companies: Bantam, Willys, and Ford. All three of the prototypes created by these companies were tweaked and put into production for the Army.

The army was never fully satisfied and eventually, a standardized vehicle was created with the engine of the Willys and the body of the Ford, which soon became known as the "Jeep". Mass production of these vehicles went from 1941 to 1945, with 700,000 Jeeps being created over this time. Dennis showed us many pictures of these vehicles and what they were capable of doing in his presentation. He finished up by answering questions from WOW members.

Franky met Tom at the 75th Anniversary when Tom "sky dived" with an Instructor during the event. Franky plans to have Tom's visit filmed by a documentary crew.

He also talked about an exhibit that he is working on at the San Fernando Valley Museum about the 75th anniversary of D-Day. The exhibit focuses on the Birmingham General Hospital during World War II, telling a story about the hospital's history and the hospital during the war.

The exhibit also honors veterans from World War II. Franky's students will help out in the exhibit. They will be dressed up in World War II uniforms, showing museum visitors around the exhibit and making it more interactive. The exhibit will be finished in the coming weeks. as abbreviated version of the two hour lecture, he gave January 9th at the Museum of the San Fernando Valley on the. history of Birmingham General Hospital.

11 Service Decorations Congress Should Create or Bring Back

When we think of veterans, we tend to separate them by era: World War II, Korea, Vietnam, Desert Storm and Post-9/11 are the most common.

But there are many problems with this.

Those eras simply don't cover everyone who served. Someone who spent all their time in the military during the late 1970s and early 1980s is neither Vietnam-era nor Desert Storm-era.

And there are achievements in the military that are deserving of a medal -- or at the very least, a ribbon. Here are a few awards and decorations we could revive or create that would help fill those gaps.

11. Deployment Medal

This one is for the poor troops who somehow ended up deployed for most of their careers. This isn't an award for time spent in Germany or South Korea. It is for hard time in the Middle East. Service members, especially in the Army between 2006 and 2015, were sent on an average of three deployments during their enlistments, even if that enlistment was just four years.

With more than half a million troops deployed in that time with three or more deployments at an average time of 7.7 months, they brought great credit upon themselves and the United States military.

10. New Uniform Ribbon

Since 2001, every branch of the military has seen some sort of uniform change, usually in the form of their work uniform. There are people wearing Operational Camouflage Pattern uniforms today who went to basic training wearing Battle Dress Uniforms. Some people reading this don't even know what BDUs are.

We propose a ribbon for every iteration of camouflage a service member had to purchase, learn to wear and quickly discard, with a "U" device for every subsequent uniform change.

9. Coast Guardsman's Medal

Unlike the Airman's Medal, Soldier's Medal, Navy and Marine Corps Medal, or even the Coast Guard Medal, the proposed Coast Guardsman's Medal would be an individual award to Coasties who leave the Coast Guard for another branch and have to endure the constant jokes about how the service isn't a real branch of the military.

8. Certificate of Merit Ribbon

This is for the soldiers, sailors, airmen, Marines, and Coast Guardsmen who come in to work on time and do their jobs to the best of their abilities. But because they're never put in an extreme situation where they need to rise to the occasion, all they ever seem to get is a certificate.

Or a coin.

7. Specially Meritorious Service Medal

The SMSM was originally a Spanish-American War-era medal awarded for great achievements not related to combat. This would be an excellent replacement award for officers to write for themselves, instead of writing their own Bronze Star, despite a lack of heroic or meritorious achievement or service.

A Specially Meritorious Service Medal would alleviate animosity toward those officers from their junior enlisted troops who always find out.

6. Iraq-Afghanistan Occupation Medal

After nearly 20 years of constant war, the U.S. military is still handing out Afghanistan Campaign Medals, as if the war is a campaign that has things like tangible goals.

Meanwhile, U.S. troops in Iraq aren't even fighting the Islamic State anymore. They're pretty much just hanging around, waiting for the Iran situation to implode. Iraq doesn't want them there, and American politicians won't let them leave.

Every subsequent deployment to Iraq, Afghanistan or someplace nearby would qualify for a green weenie device.

This is a Revolutionary War-era medal that was awarded to the New York State Militiamen who captured Maj. John André, the British officer who helped Benedict Arnold defect. Originally given to just three men, the back of the medal bore the inscription "Amor Patriæ Vincit," or "The Love of Country Conquers."

4. Cold War Victory Medal

This one is actually a big deal. It's such a big deal that it's already been designed and approved by the National Guard and is awarded in Louisiana and Texas and worn as a ribbon in Alaska. Cold War veterans were originally supposed to get just a certificate, despite spending decades believing they would be the first to die in World War III.

Basically, if a service member was honorably discharged from the end of 1945 through the fall of the Soviet Union in 1991, they're eligible to wear this award. If you're a Cold War veteran and not in one of those three states, you can get your Cold War Victory Certificate from Army Human Resources.

Even though the last drafted service member retired in 2014, it would be fitting to retroactively award service members who received the ultimate in "voluntold" assignments and opted to stay in the military despite entering against their will.

2. Drug War Service Medal

Along with the unrecognized Cold War veterans, there's a growing movement to issue a medal honoring the veterans who served in the Drug War. Even though that war is not going well for the United States, it's not for a lack of trying.

Since President Richard Nixon declared the War on Drugs in 1971, 10 state National Guards have awarded counternarcotics ribbons or medals. So has the Civil Air Patrol. Counternarcotics is a risky business, and it's only getting worse.

There are a couple of medals for actions in the 1990s conflict in the Balkans. Some service members were awarded the Armed Forces Expeditionary Medal; others got the Kosovo Campaign. But most received a NATO award.

Sure, it was a NATO action, but so is the war in Afghanistan, and Afghanistan vets who weren't even born when the U.S. invaded have one. The American intervention in Bosnia was a solidly planned, well-executed mission with goals that were achieved, and it was topped off with a peace treaty.

That deserves a medal all to itself.

Because of the high participation by Wings Over Wendy's members in their events the teamup.com WOW Events Calendar has been extended to include: ANA Meetings, MOAA/MOWW Meetings and Operation Gratitude Events
